2. ABSTRACT

Financial information should be relevant, timely and reliable to meet the needs of users. National laws and regulations, as well as an entity's stakeholders, often require an external audit of some elements of the financial information to give users confidence that the information can be trusted. For an external audit to fulfill its objective the users of audited financial statements must have confidence that the auditor has worked to a suitable standard and that "a quality audit" has been performed.
